Unfinished Business

1. Update Discipleship and Reconciliation Polity

Whereas: Annual Conference has not reviewed the discipleship and reconciliation process in 22 years since passing the Discipleship and Reconciliation Paper in 1977;

Whereas: since 1977, Annual Conference passed the polity and policy papers, Guidelines for Ministerial Relationships (1992 & 1996) and Ethics For Congregations (1996), that affect conflict resolution processes;

Whereas: society has become more litigious over the past 22 years and the effects of this change on the responsibilities of Discipleship and Reconciliation Committees need to be clarified;

Whereas: several districts report the following frustrations with their attempts to have viable Discipleship and Reconciliation Committees: excessive travel, difficulty in being perceived as being objective in conflict situations, being called upon too late, and becoming over-extended in long-term conflicts;

Therefore, the Discipleship and Reconciliation Committee of the Atlantic Northeast District request the 1999 District Conference at the Midway Church of the Brethren, Lebanon, Pennsylvania to petition Annual Conference to appoint a study committee to evaluate and update polity for Discipleship and Reconciliation Committees. It is recommended that the study committee include representatives from Ministry of Reconciliation, Council of District Executives, and Discipleship and Reconciliation Committees.

Action of the Atlantic Northeast District Board: The District Board of Atlantic Northeast District, meeting in regular session on July 31, 1999, passed the query on to District Conference, which will meet October 9, 1999 in Lebanon, Pennsylvania.

2. Concerning Discipleship and Reconciliation Paper

Whereas: it has been 22 years since Annual Conference last reviewed the Discipleship and Reconciliation Paper;

Whereas: since that time, the Annual Conferences has addressed several related membership, conflict and power abuse issues within the life of the church, namely, Church of the Brethren Membership Polity (1985), Guidelines For Ministerial Relationships (1996) and Ethics for Congregations (1996);

Whereas: the responsibility for assisting Districts in training and interpretation of the work of Discipleship and Reconciliation Committees has been moved from the General Board to the On Earth Peace Committee’s Ministry of Reconciliation program;

Therefore, we, the Shenandoah District Board, ask the Shenandoah District Conference to ask the Annual Conference to study and update the 1977 Discipleship and Reconciliation paper giving special attention to how the church responds when there is confessed, alleged, or perceived relational broken-ness in those of the set-apart ministry or laity.

We ask that this review include a study and clarification of the relationship of the work between Discipleship and Reconciliation Committees and the newly-formed Ethics Committees in Districts.

Action of the Shenandoah District Board: The District Board of the Shenandoah District, meeting in regular session on August 24, 1999, approved and passed the query on to District Conference, which will meet on November 6, 1999.

Discipleship and Reconciliation Committee
Report - 2002

I. INTRODUCTION

The survival of a congregation is dependent on its ability to identify key issues of the faith community and to discern constructive, rather than destructive, responses to them. It often marks a turning point in the life of the faith community – a point from which it becomes stronger or a point marking its decline. How congregations handle conflict is almost always one of those turning points. Indeed, for many congregations today, the single most important issue determining its health, even survival, is how the congregation handles significant differences – whether those differences are difficult decisions yet to be made or differences that have already grown into open conflict.

It is the acknowledgement of this reality that provides a window of opportunity for the Church of the Brethren to practice what it preaches as a peace church; to learn how to make dealing with conflict and potential conflicts a congregational priority, and to appreciate the wondrous works a faith community can accomplish when it is not preoccupied with its own internal differences.

Query Background

The 2000 Annual Conference received two queries asking that the 1977 Discipleship and Reconciliation paper be reviewed in light of the significant changes in our church and the wider society in the 25 years since it was passed. One query noted the difficulty in several Districts of maintaining viable Discipleship and Reconciliation Committees (D&R Committees) consistent with the vision of the 1977 paper. Both queries specifically asked for clarification of the relationship within Districts between the D&R Committee and the newly formed Ethics Committee.¹ This paper addresses those concerns and offers a new model, the Shalom Team, which can help equip the Church of the Brethren for ministry in the 21st Century.

Findings of the Study Committee

- Changes in the Church of the Brethren. The radical changes in the past quarter century in churches and in the culture has required denominations, including our own, to re-think how they can best serve congregations and their needs. The Church of the Brethren has developed resources and adopted polity which have drastically altered the ecclesiastical context in which the Discipleship and Reconciliation paper was written. Annual Conference has adopted Ethics papers for both congregations and the set apart ministry. The General Board has restructured, resulting in the development of a network of Congregational Life Teams (CLT) to provide resources for the strengthening of congregations. Also since 1977, the Ministry of Reconciliation and its Practitioner’s Network have evolved and serve as prime resources for conflict transformation. These changes require a rethinking of conflict in the Church of the Brethren and the church’s response to it.
• Relationship to the Ethics Papers. While not every District has had a Discipleship and Reconciliation committee, every District now has an Ethics Committee. While the ethics process is designed for and works best in dealing with allegations of sexual misconduct, it nonetheless provides a helpful touchstone—one held in common across the denomination—for understanding the nature of any ethical norm and obligation and the accountability that comes with these. In that sense the Ethics papers serve a discipline function in the church that may have been formerly carried by the Discipleship and Reconciliation Committee. It is the intent of this paper to present a new and parallel model and process to serve a primarily reconciliation function for the church. This paper, therefore, upholds the distinction between ethical issues and other issues that affect the health and well-being of the church. The Study Committee acknowledges that there is a “gray area” in which those issues overlap, and urges ongoing assessment of how the ethics process and the process outlined in this paper can best work together.

• The Limitations of the D&R Process. The interviews and surveys conducted by the Study Committee confirmed that members of D&R Committees have been dedicated people committed to bringing transformation to conflict situations. That research also confirmed, however, that the concerns specified in the query have hindered the effectiveness of the current D&R process in some parts of the denomination. All too often D&R Committees have been impeded by excessive travel, difficulty in being perceived as being objective in conflict situations, being called upon too late, and becoming over-extended in long-term conflicts. Many times persons have been called upon as volunteers to work in conflicts that would have been extremely difficult for seasoned professionals.

• The Need for a Pro-Active Approach to Conflict. Congregations need to understand conflict, primarily through education and training, before it becomes a crisis. While the description of conflict in the 1977 Discipleship and Reconciliation paper was holistic, the way the paper was implemented often resulted in the narrowing of the definition to actual fighting. Thus Discipleship and Reconciliation committees were not called until conflict had been allowed to escalate beyond the hope of effective intervention.

• The Need for a New Model. It is clear that a new model is needed to help the Church of the Brethren live up to the biblical call to be communities of shalom in a changing world. It is also clear that the circumstances and needs of 23 different Districts will vary. The Shalom Team model proposed in this paper is intended to be flexible enough to be used by each District, while at the same time focused enough to promote effective ways of working at conflict transformation in a variety of settings.

The call to accountability sounded by the 1977 Discipleship and Reconciliation paper is more urgent than ever. The Shalom Team model provides a way for the Church of the Brethren to recommit itself to actively seek God's shalom.
II. A CALL TO SHALOM

The Biblical Vision of Shalom
We live in a world in which conflict is abundant. Extreme forms of conflict, such as terrorism, confront us with the destructive power that conflict holds over us as individuals, congregations and nations. We are also confronted with a different vision of the world found in Scripture. We look to this vision to find transformation for ourselves and for all creation.

This vision is found in the Hebrew word “shalom”. Shalom is a word rich with multiple meanings, including the concepts of peace with justice, wholeness, health, right relationships, reconciliation, and harmony with and for all creation; in short, total well being. The word “shalom” is found over 300 times in the Old Testament (Hebrew) scriptures.2 Shalom shapes our relationship with others, and seeks their well being. (Jeremiah. 29:7; Psalm 34:14) Shalom and salvation are virtually synonymous. (Psalm 85:5ff; Psalm 119:165; Isaiah 32) Shalom calls for justice and God’s children are to take an active hand in maintaining it. (Isaiah 32:16-17, Jeremiah 6:14, 8:11)

The New Testament proclaims Jesus Christ as the bringer and the fulfillment of Shalom. “I have come,” he says, “that you might have life, and have it abundantly.” (John 10:10) God’s people had anticipated that fulfillment of prophecy, (Luke 1:52-53; Luke 1:73-75; Luke 2:28-32) and saw it realized in Jesus’ life and teaching. (Luke 4:18-19; Matthew 5:17-20) Through Christ’s death and resurrection lives are transformed: “So if anyone is in Christ, there is a new creation; everything old has passed away; see everything has become new!” (2 Corinthians 5:17) This new life is dependent on right relationships (Matthew 18:15-20; Galatians 6:1-2; Ephesians 4:11-16; Philippians 2:14-18) and faithful discipleship. (2 Corinthians 5:20-21) As followers of Jesus Christ, we are people of shalom.

A Theological Understanding of Conflict
Many of us have acquired the understanding that conflict is sin. This belief has led to the response that all conflict is bad and should be avoided. A frequent result of this understanding can be seen in the way many congregations deny the presence of tension, leading to brokenness, until conflict has escalated beyond a manageable level. Speed Leas, church conflict specialist, states, “The typically unspoken assumption is that if they were really good people, working in good institutions under divine guidance, conflict simply would not exist.” 3 Conflict does not depend on our “goodness” or “badness”. Conflict simply exists in the church and in the world. Conflict has revealed itself to people of faith since the creation of the world as revealed in the Book of Genesis. (Adam & Eve, Genesis 3; Cain & Abel, Genesis 4) The Apostle Paul, writing to the early church, acknowledges the importance of differences in the church, affirming the diversity of gifts as the work of the Holy Spirit, and likening them to the different but interdependent parts of the body. (1 Corinthians 12, Ephesians 4, Romans 12) Such differences can lead to conflict, but Paul’s concern is not whether there is conflict in the church, but how it is dealt with. (1 Corinthians 6) Hoping and praying that conflict will “go away” has devastated relationships and congregations, denying one aspect of being human. The community of faith has been reconciled to God through Jesus Christ, and has itself been called to a ministry of reconciliation. (2 Corinthians 5)

Conflict is not a choice, but how we use it is a choice. “Imagine how different our conflicts would be if we could move from an ‘Oh dear, how terrible’ to ‘What is God trying to say to us?’” 4 Conflict may provide a vital spiritual function, calling us to release tensions and create options more in-line with the life and teaching of Jesus Christ. Brokenness can be wasted or used as a wake-up call to strive toward total well-being or shalom.

The Need for Shalom in the Church

Shalom Team is more than a name. It is a call to a positive, forward-looking path of healing and wholeness. To be “People of Shalom” means to follow the Biblical call to be in right relationship with and seek the total well being of all God’s creation.

Twenty-five years after the Discipleship and Reconciliation paper we still need a rebirth of shalom in our congregations and in the wider church. We call ourselves a peace church yet continue to destroy each other in unbridled conflicts. The result is a state of brokenness that, while not the sole cause, is still a significant factor in the membership decline evident in our denomination today. What would be the effect on the steady loss of membership and the loss of actual and potential leadership in our church if we were truly committed to living out the Biblical vision of shalom?

Congregations must be the foundation upon which the denomination builds, and a rebirth of shalom must begin there. Such a weight, however, is difficult for many congregations to bear. Few of our congregations and members who have experienced severe conflict will underestimate the toll on individual relationships and congregational life that conflict takes. Brokenness saps energy and spirit and results in the decline of effective ministry and membership. Even low levels of chronic conflict hinder the effectiveness of congregations, and can play a role in their decline. Congregations in conflict simply cannot function in ways that provide the foundation for a healthy Church of the Brethren. We affirm the way of shalom as an option for congregations experiencing brokenness.

Shalom and the Transformation of Conflict

Mennonite peace consultant, John Paul Lederach, suggests that rather than trying to eliminate or control conflict, we learn to work with its “dialectic nature”.5 People involved in relationships create conflict. Just as destructive conflict affects those relationships, the constructive dealing with differences can also change the people, events and relationships that created the initial conflict.

Conflict, when encouraged to escalate or left on its own, can become destructive. When aspects of conflict are transformed, the result can be improved relationships, group dynamics, and social structures. Those are the choices that lay before us as people of shalom.

In today’s climate of rapid and constant change, and in a time when fundamental models of mission and ministry are shifting, congregations find themselves facing life and death issues. A harsh reality, confirmed by experience, is that congregations locked into death spirals of chronic brokenness and conflict will not survive. Constructively dealing with conflicts is no longer optional; it is the key to survival.

It is the hope of this paper that establishing shalom—total well being—as the goal of congregational life will change the way we think of conflict. Shalom Teams will be equipped to work with congregations before conflict deteriorates into destructive fighting and brokenness. The health of congregations is significantly enhanced and the threat of severe conflict greatly reduced when churches are provided with the support and resources needed to focus time and energy on a wide variety of issues affecting their corporate life and ministry.

III. THE Shalom Team MODEL

A task team, to be known as the Shalom Team, will be appointed by the District Executive Committee or its equivalent, and will be accountable and reportable to it. The Shalom Team will work in partnership with the District Executive Minister. Its purpose will be to empower congregations, and Districts, to maintain and enhance healthy relationships, and deal creatively with brokenness in its earliest stages.

The Shalom Team will work in partnership with the District Executive Minister, and may be activated by a contact made through the District Executive Minister or through a Shalom Team member.

Membership and Qualifications

The Shalom Team will be of a sufficient size to meet District needs, with attention given to gender balance and geographical representation within the District. Persons eligible for the Shalom Team must be active members of the Church of the Brethren. They will serve for a term to be determined by the District. The District Executive Minister, the District Board Chair, and the District Moderator may meet with the Shalom Team.

Persons eligible for the Shalom Team will meet the following qualifications:

1. Members will demonstrate the following personal qualities:
   • Spiritual and emotional maturity
   • The ability to manage their own anxiety and be a non-anxious presence with others in conflict
   • Respect for confidentiality
   • Sensitivity, honesty, and integrity in their dealings with others
   • Commitment to the beliefs, practices and polity of the Church of the Brethren
   • Openness to and respect for diversity (cultural, personality styles, power, etc.)
   • Willingness to receive training in areas related to restoring wholeness

2. Members will demonstrate competency or will receive training in one or more of the following areas:
   • Listening skills
   • Basic conflict resolution skills
Functions
There are four functions of the Shalom Team: Consult, Assess, Educate, and Mentor.

1. Consult
   The Shalom Team will be available to provide timely, short-term consultation on any issue which hinders, or threatens to hinder, progress toward total well being. Consultation will involve active listening, prayer, and discernment.

2. Assess
   Based on the consultation, Shalom Team members may identify the needs or name the brokenness. Assessment should include assisting persons to envision “next steps” that help move them toward wholeness, and help identify resources that would enhance such progress. The Shalom Team will be aware of a wide range of resources, and will assist persons and congregations in identifying options appropriate to their needs. Such resources will probably include Church of the Brethren agencies and their staffs (including Ministry of Reconciliation, Practitioner’s Network, Association of Brethren Caregivers, Congregational Life Team members), but can also include other local, regional, or national agencies or consultants, or resources provided within the District.

3. Educate
   The Shalom Team will provide, on a regular basis, local, sectional, or District-wide educational and training events utilizing the above-mentioned congregational resources. Shalom Team members will demonstrate a willingness to receive education as well as facilitate educational events being brought to the District. Examples of education events can include, but should not be limited to, the following:
   - Preventative skills that congregations can learn before differences escalate into destructive conflict.
   - Competency in conflict transformation tools and skills (including those listed in the qualifications for Shalom Team members).
   - Collaborative tools for making difficult decisions.
   - Responding in the early stages to challenges and issues currently facing congregations or Districts.
   - Trends and challenges in the wider church and their impact on the District.
Shalom Teams may become aware of possible ethical violations at any stage of these four functions. Should this occur, an immediate referral to the Ethics process will be made. Shalom Teams may be called in to focus on any conflict or brokenness resulting from an Ethics process.

IMPLEMENTATION

Responsibility for implementation will be given to each District Board, or its equivalent. Within a reasonable time, Districts will ensure that a Shalom Team is appointed and sufficient training is conducted to insure that team members have the competencies required for initial consultation with congregations.

Transition from D & R Committees to Shalom Teams

Districts that have D&R Committees that are doing constructive work are encouraged to maintain that function until the Shalom Teams are in place. D&R Committee members are eligible to serve on a Shalom Team during the transition.

Financial Commitment

In our present day world, the expertise needed for assessment and conflict transformation will require professionals in addition to volunteers. Congregations that can find the money for a new furnace or emergency repairs to the church building need to understand that the spiritual and emotional health of the congregation deserves at least an equivalent investment of financial resources.

It is highly recommended that Districts model financial commitment to shalom by including a line item in their budget for matching funds for congregations willing to invest in their own health. This would provide options that may not have been available for hurting congregations in the past.

CONCLUSION

An historic peace church like the Church of the Brethren serves a unique role in the world by lifting up the New Testament vision of "the things that make for peace.” (Luke 19:42) As followers of Jesus Christ, for nearly three centuries we have taken seriously this calling to a ministry of reconciliation. (2 Corinthians 5:18) What we now do with this ministry is up to us. As people of Shalom, we recognize that conflict can be productive or destructive, depending on our choices. To be faithful to our call, we expand our understanding of “the things that make for peace.” We choose shalom.
